

Foodborne Illness

What is it?

The term foodborne illness does not refer to a particular disease; it means that the cause of the illness came from food. Over 180 different organisms can cause foodborne illness. In 67% of cases of foodborne illness, the cause is unknown.

The source of a foodborne illness is rarely the last meal a person ate. The symptoms and times for these different illnesses may either be so similar that they are difficult to distinguish, or so unusual that a person might not recognize the illness as foodborne. Determining which organism or toxin that caused a person's illness requires professional evaluation. The Clermont County General Health District has staff to help make that determination.

What is an outbreak?

Foodborne illness outbreaks are defined as two or more people with similar cases of illness that had a common exposure.

What do I do when a customer calls and says they're sick?

Be proactive. The Clermont County Health District is here to help you. Please take a name and a phone number of the customer and let them know that you will be forwarding the complaint to the Clermont County General Health District. Save any leftover food in the refrigerator and date it. We will contact you as soon as possible

Do I have to call the Health Department?

Yes. In the State of Ohio, anyone who knows of a possible foodborne outbreak must report it to the local health department. That means if a customer calls and reports that 2 or more of their party ate food from your business and became ill afterwards, you are required to report that information to the local health department for investigation. The purpose of an investigation is not to blame the business. It is to determine the cause and prevent the spread of illness to anyone else.
